describe your self It's a nice 6'10"-6'11" with a black cross on it do you have a special move? The mirror solution - an overhead sup which is too technical to get into right now ambition to push the existing promotion called "Future Championship Wrestling" - I'd like to be the top promotion in Britain. And to work for the top American company WWE how?
 The British Bulldog - David Hye Hall, one of the best wrestlers in the UK. if you were a drink what would you be and why? Jam because how do you relax? Listening to Dixie Chicks and going to JB's, the local pub nightclub in Dudley five star flash

describe your self Heavy and burly with a yellow lightning bolt and a big star do you have a special move? Slams - the Five Star Splash for starters ambition To wrestle in Japan - it's a whole different thing and there how? The wrestler Bret Hart if you were a drink what would you be and why? A pint of lager, just because how do you relax? Sitting in bed watching a film cross-generational appeal and were particularly popular amongst the rabid grannies who stayed for almost ringside "Easy Easy" they screamed as ED delivered one of his trademark speeches, dropping his full 20 stone on to the prone form of his opponent. Ironically, wrestling aficionados insist that bouts involving Daddy, born Shirley Crabtree, and Flashback were technically awful and their recent showmanship really led to the long and terrible demise of British wrestling Saturday afternoon wrestling regularly got audiences of 10m but when current BDC DG Greg Dyer arrived at ITV in 1988, he
