

UNIVERSITY OF GLOUCESTERSHIRE

This is a peer-reviewed, post-print (final draft post-refereeing) version of the following published document, This is an Accepted Manuscript of an article published by Taylor & Francis in Gender, Place and Culture on 24 April 2019, available online:

<http://www.tandfonline.com/10.1080/0966369X.2018.1554559> and is licensed under All Rights Reserved license:

Narkowicz, Kasia ORCID: 0000-0003-3733-922X and Korolczuk, Elzbieta ORCID: 0000-0002-8263-5530 (2019) Searching for feminist geographies: mappings outside the discipline in Poland. Gender, Place and Culture, 26 (7 - 9). pp. 1215-1222. doi:10.1080/0966369X.2018.1554559

Official URL: <https://doi.org/10.1080/0966369X.2018.1554559>

DOI: <http://dx.doi.org/10.1080/0966369X.2018.1554559>

EPrint URI: <https://eprints.glos.ac.uk/id/eprint/6857>

Disclaimer

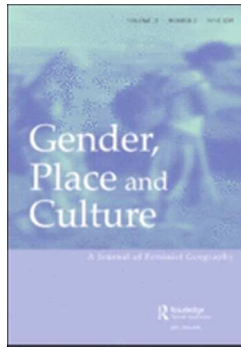

The University of Gloucestershire has obtained warranties from all depositors as to their title in the material deposited and as to their right to deposit such material.

The University of Gloucestershire makes no representation or warranties of commercial utility, title, or fitness for a particular purpose or any other warranty, express or implied in respect of any material deposited.

The University of Gloucestershire makes no representation that the use of the materials will not infringe any patent, copyright, trademark or other property or proprietary rights.

The University of Gloucestershire accepts no liability for any infringement of intellectual property rights in any material deposited but will remove such material from public view pending investigation in the event of an allegation of any such infringement.

PLEASE SCROLL DOWN FOR TEXT.

Searching for feminist geographies: Mappings outside the discipline in Poland

Journal:	Gender, Place and Culture
Manuscript ID	CGPC-2018-0190.R1
Manuscript Type:	Article for Themed Section
Keywords:	feminist geographies, gender studies, feminist sociology, feminist movements, post-socialism, Poland

SCHOLARONE™
Manuscripts

Searching for feminist geographies: Mappings outside the discipline in Poland

Key words: feminist geographies, gender studies, feminist sociology, feminist movements, post-socialism, Poland

Abstract: Feminist geography in Poland does not exist as a sub-discipline of geography. While there are individual Polish geographers pushing for feminist perspectives, most feminist analyses of issues relating to place, space and politics of location can be found within gender studies or feminist sociology. In this sense, feminist geography in Poland cannot compare to Anglophone feminist geography and attempts to incorporate it within such an established field risks being reductive. Instead, in this report, we shift the focus to the scholarship and activism that does exist in Poland, outside of geography. This contribution focuses on shedding light on geographical questions such as the body, the city and gendered geopolitics that have been recurring themes in gender studies, feminist sociology and feminist activism in Poland. We conclude by pointing to the need to mobilise broadly, and internationally, between disciplines with the intention of de-centering dominant knowledges. For feminist scholarship this is particularly important in the context of recent political successes of right-wing forces.

Introduction

The exercise of mapping feminist contributions to geography in Poland largely confirmed what we already knew about the absence of feminist perspectives from some of the established disciplines in Polish academia. While it is true that feminist geography in Central and Eastern Europe cannot compare with its Western counterparts as it barely – if at all – exists as a sub-discipline of geography, the task of bringing into being something that does not exist risks becoming yet another attempt to make up for epistemic absences in our region. Questions of place and space, the human environment and society are tackled by academics in other relatively visible disciplines in Poland, mostly in gender studies and feminist sociology. Feminist scholars analyse issues such as access to public space, urban development or the interdependence of geography, economics and gender relations in neoliberalism using the lenses of critical sociology, queer theory or postcolonial studies. Therefore, we decided to map feminist scholarship and activism in Poland, focusing on some questions and issues which are key to feminist geographers today. One such issue is the struggle for the right to abortion that been central in the formation of a democratic public sphere in Poland, resulting in the criminalisation of abortion almost immediately after the democratic transition in 1989 (Fuszara 1993). In the last few years a new wave of anti-feminism led by right-wing populists and religious groups has been spreading across Europe. They oppose reproductive rights, the presence of ‘gender studies’ at universities and challenge the very concept of ‘gender’ in public discourse (Korolczuk and Graff 2018). Suspicious of intellectual elites and existing institutions of higher learning, anti-genderists also challenge the legitimacy of feminist research. As we have argued elsewhere: ‘Just like second wave feminism established itself in the academic world in the form of gender studies the present wave of anti-feminist activism seeks to legitimize itself by establishing anti-gender studies.’ (reference removed). Polish women have been at the forefront of the 3 struggle against right-wing groups. Since the right-wing government came to power in 2015,

1
2
4 women's bodies have become a constant presence on the streets in Poland. They have held
5 demonstrations in key sites of male institutional power, engaged in blocking right-wing
6 marches and organized in cities and villages against further restrictions to reproductive rights.
7 Recognizing the transnational character of the right-wing mobilization the Polish women's 8 movement is also internationally oriented.
9

11 Feminist geographies outside of geography

12 Social and economic geography in Poland, which is the equivalent of human geography in 13 some Western contexts, focuses predominantly on quantitative and positivist knowledge 14 production, actively distancing itself from what are considered overtly 'political' areas of 15 research (Lisocka-Jaegermann 2016). This lack of a critical approach has been credited to the 16 Polish transformation context (Timar and Fekete 2010, Wójcik and Suliborski 2014). In a
17 post-socialist country where Marxism and feminism are routinely delegitimized as the legacy
18 of Soviet imperialism, a critical strand in human geography - one that is invested in 19 challenging inequalities, Western imperialism, and capitalism - simply did not take root,
20 which in turn resulted also in an absence of feminist geography (Lisocka-Jaegermann 2016).
21
22
23
24

25 There are important exceptions to this dominant trend due to individual geographers pushing 26 for feminist perspectives, such as Bogumiła Lisocka-Jaegermann from the Institute of 27 Regional and Global studies at the University of Warsaw. She brought the term 'feminist 28 geography' into Polish Geography textbooks and has been teaching feminist perspectives in 29 geography within and outside the academy. Lisocka-Jaegermann was also one of the 30 organisers of the International Geographical Union Gender Commission workshop in 31 Warsaw in 2014 'The Gendering of New realities: Unequal Challenges and Responsibilities'
32 (Lisocka-Jaegermann and Grochowski 2014), an event that gathered scholars advocating for 33 more inclusive feminist geographies that go beyond the Anglophone context (Huang et al
34 2017). While important, such initiatives focus on the discipline of geography, thereby 35 inevitably excluding Polish researchers who work within the much broader, interdisciplinary,
36 field of feminist scholarship. Feminist geographies in Poland often develop outside of the 37 disciplinary confines of geography, for example within the field of Gender Studies.
38
39
40
41
42

43 The history of feminist and gender research in Poland is usually discussed in the context of 44 the post-socialist transformation and the process of institutionalisation of the women's 45 movement in the region. However, the first seminars on feminist studies were already being 46 organized in the early 1980s, first at the University of Warsaw and then at Jagiellonian
47 University. The first Women's Studies Centre was founded at the University of Łódź in 1992
48 and throughout the 1990s courses in Women's Studies and/or Gender Studies became 49 available at many universities. As a named degree at undergraduate or postgraduate level, 50 Gender Studies was (and still is) a graduate level course, incorporated administratively but 51 not financially into the structures of specific universities, hence the students are required to 52 pay for these courses. But feminist perspectives have also found their ways into mandatory
53 courses in several disciplines, e.g. anthropology (Chołuj 2002). In this respect Poland appears
54 quite advanced compared to countries like France or Germany where hardly any Women's or 55
56
57
58
59

1
2
3 Gender Studies existed until the mid-1990s (Griffin and Braidotti 2002: 2). While in the 4 United States the institutionalisation of Women's Studies began in the 1970s and in Great
5 Britain in the early 1980's, in most European countries this process took off much later.
6

7 In the 1990s feminist scholars in Poland focused their research mostly in three areas: culture,
8 political and democratic participation, and sexual and reproductive rights (Grabowska 2013,
9 Graff 2003). The main fields of inquiry changed over time and by the mid-2000s scholars
10 began to analyse economic and social aspects of EU accession, gendered aspects of class
11 dynamics and migration, work conditions in feminized sectors, urban development, 12 motherhood, and experiences of the LGBTQ communities. Questions tackled by different 13 strands of feminist geography, including mobility and separation, micro-geographies of the 14 body, colonialism and postcolonialism, and the relation between gendered societies and the 15 environment, surfaced in these analyses (see Bobako 2017, Majewska 2018, Urbańska 2015).
16
17
18

19 Space, Place and Politics of Location: challenges to hierarchical frameworks

20 Politics of location and the question of space has been a recurring theme in gender studies in 21 Poland. Because of its geopolitical position and history, the country is often depicted as 22 located between two different worlds: the East and the West, and while it is seen as more
23 culturally 'advanced' than its eastern neighbours, Poland remains perceived as a laggard in 24 relation to the West (see Janion 2006). These hegemonic discourses of belonging and 25 development are of course gendered. The West is depicted as 'the force of good' promoting 26 women's rights and gender equality, in order to challenge local 'oriental' traditions, rooted in 27 religion. Many Polish feminist scholars and activists have adopted this frame, either
28 unreflexively or strategically trying to 'catch up' with the West (Regulska and Grabowska 29 2013). During the last decade, however, gender scholars have begun to argue that we need 'to 30 challenge the existing hierarchical, binary frameworks perpetuated in transnational feminist 31 scholarship, [and] to recognize the second world as a site of global struggles' (Grabowska 32 2012: 387). Focus on the East/West divide has been replaced by a more nuanced view, which 33 pays more attention to local conditions and transnational connections. This shift is reflected 34 for example in the critiques of the waves metaphor which originated in the Anglo-phone 35 world but has been employed to measure the development of feminist movements
36 everywhere else (Graff 2003).
37
38
39
40
41

42 The question of location becomes even more important due to increasing mobility within 43 academia, where scholars from outside western academia migrate to western countries. We 44 are Polish-born feminist scholars and activists, who engage with geographical issues 45 including gendered claims to the city (reference removed), social mobilisations (reference 46 removed), politics of the body (reference removed) and gendered conflicts in the public
47 sphere (reference removed), and we both work abroad and publish mostly in English,
48 reproducing hegemonic modes of knowledge production that benefit the Anglo-American
49 and more broadly, western scholarship. As Huang et al (2017) point out, publishing outside 50 of what is considered 'mainstream' and 'high impact' international journals is risky to 51 scholars. This is particularly significant in the current neoliberal climate and in the context of 52 the reform of higher education introduced in July 2018 that strengthens a trend in Poland that 53 favours publishing in English. This means that when non-Western feminist academics
54
55
56
57
58
59
60

1
2
3 produce scholarship in their countries, that is outside of the dominant spaces of knowledge
4 production, their work remains unknown to broader international audiences. However, when 5 they focus on disseminating their work within the dominant spaces of Anglo-American
6 journals and conferences, they often end up as deliverers of raw data and case studies,
7 enriching the already well-developed field and further impoverishing what is already
8 marginalised. Hence, it is important to critically assess the politics of knowledge production
9 and dissemination, recognising existing and new patterns of power and marginalization.
10
11

12 Gender and the city

13 Another field of inquiry, which exists in Poland in spite of the lack of feminist geography,
14 concerns the relation between gender and place. While a strong current in mainstream Polish
15 geography indeed focuses on the city, these analyses routinely lack a feminist perspective.
16 Instead, feminist engagements with space and place are being employed in other academic 17 disciplines, including feminist sociology, and outside the academy, mostly in feminist
18 activism. Already in 2013, feminist economist Zofia Łapniewska and feminist anthropologist
19 Katarzyna Puzon developed and taught the course 'Gender and the City' introducing key
20 geographical concepts to students at the University of Warsaw. Łapniewska also teaches a
21 shorter course titled 'Feminist City Studies' at the Polish Academy of Sciences. In 2017
22 feminist urban activist Sylwia Chutnik ran an interdisciplinary workshop called 'City and 23 Gender' for students at the University of Warsaw (Chutnik 2016). There is also a growing
24 number of publications that explore the city through a feminist lens, often produced outside
25 of academia by activists (Furgał 2010, Łapniewska and Puzon 2016, Erbel 2010, Arteria 26 2010).
27
28
29
30
31

32 Conclusions

33 In the Polish context, feminist engagements with geographical perspectives happen outside of 34 mainstream geography, in the broad and interdisciplinary field of gender studies and feminist 35 sociology, and they are often threatened by socially conservative groups and political shifts.
36 The recent wave of opposition to gender equality, including attacks on gender scholars, 37 further cuts in funding for gender studies and de-institutionalization of gender equality by the 38 Law and Justice regime show how precarious the position of feminist scholars is in the 39 academic world, and how contested the very existence of the concept of gender remains. It
40 also attests to the need to mobilise broadly, and internationally, around academic freedom
41 and to strengthen exchange of knowledge between disciplines. To succeed, such initiatives
42 must be done with a clear intention within universities in the English-speaking world to de-
43 centre dominant knowledges, which includes reconsidering where we search for feminist 44 geographies in the first place.
45
46
47
48
49
50
51
52
53
54
55
56
57
58
59
60

Bibliography

Arteria. 2010. Szlakiem głosu. Tożsamości mniejszościowe w przestrzeni miasta. [Minority Identities in the public sphere]. Stowarzyszenia Gdańsk: Arteria

Bobako, Monika. 2017. Islamofobia jako technologia władzy. Studium z antropologii politycznej. [Islamophobia as technology of power. A study in political anthropology] Warszawa: Universitas.

Chołuj, Bożena. 2002 Gender studies in Warsaw, in: Fleßner Heike and Potts Lydia eds. Societies in Transition — Challenges to Women's and Gender Studies. Studien interdisziplinäre Geschlechterforschung, vol 4. Wiesbaden: VS Verlag für Sozialwissenschaften

Chutnik, Sylwia. 2016. Miasto jako gra kulturowa. Kilka refleksji na temat zajęć 'Miasto i plec'. [City as a cultural game. Some reflection about teaching 'City and Gender']. Jakieś Studia Gejowskie lub Lesbijskie. <https://jsgll.wordpress.com/2016/07/04/miasto-jako-gra-kulturowa-kilka-refleksji-na-temat-zajec-miasto-i-plec-sylwia-chutnik/>

Erbel, Joanna. 2010. Gender w mieście. Jak perspektywa urbanistyczna zmienia myślenie o płci? [Gender in the city. How an urban perspective changes thinking about the city] In: Furgał, E (ed.) Krakowski Szlak Kobiet. Przewodniczka po Krakowie emancypantek. Fundacja Przestrzeń Kobiet: Kraków.

Furgał, Ewa. ed. 2010. Krakowski Szlak Kobiet. Przewodniczka po Krakowie emancypantek. [The Kraków Women's Trail. Guide to the suffragists' Krakow] Fundacja Przestrzeń Kobiet: Kraków

Fuszara, Małgorzata. 1993. Abortion and the Formation of the Public Sphere in Poland. In: Gender Politics and Postcommunism: Reflections from Eastern Europe and Former Soviet Union edited by Nanette Funk and Magda Mueller. London: Routledge

Grabowska Magdalena. 2012. Bringing Second World In: Conservative Revolution(s), Socialist Legacies and Transnational Silences in the Trajectories of Polish Feminism, Signs: Journal of Women in Culture and Society 37, 2: 385–411

Graff, Agnieszka 2003. Lost between the Waves? The Paradoxes of Feminist Chronology and Activism in Contemporary Poland, Journal of International Women's Studies 4 (2): 100–116

Griffin Gabrielle and Rosi Braidotti, eds. 2002. Thinking Differently: A Reader in European Women's Studies. London and New York: Zed Books

Huang Shirlena, Janice Monk, Joos Droogleever Fortuijn, Maria Dolors Garcia-Ramon & Janet Henshall Momsen. 2017. A continuing agenda for gender: the role of the IGU Commission on gender and geography, Gender, Place & Culture, 24:7, 919-938

1
2
3 Korolczuk, Elżbieta and Agnieszka Graff. 2018. 'Gender as Ebola from Brussels': The Anti-4 colonial Frame and the Rise of Illiberal Populism, Signs: Journal of Women in Culture and
5 Society, 43(4): 797-821
6

7 Lisocka-Jaegermann, Bożena. 2016. Geografia Wobec krytycznej teorii społecznej:
8 Doświadczenia i perspektywy. Czy w Polsce potrzebujemy geografii krytycznej? [Geography
9 and critical social theory: experiences and perspectives. Do we need critical geography in 10 Poland?] (9):141 – 158
11
12

13 Lisocka-Jaegermann, Bożena and Mirosław Grochowski. 2014. Report on the IGU Gender
14 Commission Workshop 2014: The Gendering of New Realities: Unequal Challenges and 15 Responsibilities, 16-17 August 2014. IGU Gender.
16 <http://igugender.socsci.uva.nl/documents/ReportonWarsawWorkshop2014.pdf>
17
18

19 Łapniewska, Zofia and Katarzyna Puzon. 2016. Gender i Miasto [Gender and City] In:
20 Szlakiem głosu. Tożsamości mniejszościowe w przestrzeni miasta [Voice's Trail. Minority
21 identities in the space of the city], 37-45, Gdańsk: Stowarzyszenie Arteria
22
23

24 Majewska Ewa. 2018. Kontrpubliczności ludowe i feministyczne. [People's and feminist 25 counterpublics]. Warszawa: Książka i Prasa.
26
27

28 Regulska, Joanna and Magdalena Grabowska. 2013. Social Justice, Hegemony, and 29 Women's Mobilizations In: Post-Communism from Within: Social Justice, Mobilization, and
30 Hegemony, edited by J. Kubik and A. Linch, 139-190, New York: New York University
31 Press
32
33

34 Timar, Judith and Eva G Fekete. 2010. Fighting for recognition: feminist geography in East-
35 Central Europe. Gender, Place and Culture. 17(6): 775-790
36
37

38 Urbańska, Sylwia. 2015. Matka Polka na odległość [Polish Mother on distance]. Warszawa:
39 Fundacja Nauki Polskiej
40
41

42 Wójcik M., A Suliborski. 2014. Geografia społeczna w Polsce – geneza, koncepcje i 43 zróżnicowanie problemowe [Human geography in Poland – origin, concepts and issues], In:
44 Dysproporcje społeczne i gospodarcze w przestrzeni Łodzi. Czynniki, mechanizmy, skutki,
45 edited by A. Suliborski, M. Wójcik, 17–48, Łódź: Wydawnictwo Uniwersytetu Łódzkiego
46
47
48
49
50
51
52
53
54
55
56
57
58
59
60